

Very good word choice and placement.

HERO

by: Eric Chamberlain

Rick Kruger of the Boston Red-sox is my hero. For all I knew I was an average kid playing an average game. That is until I took lessons from this magnificent pitcher by the name of Rick Kruger.

could add more details

This man Rick Kruger loved the bible and all its verses. He would read five chapters a night he loved to stay in touch with god so much. But on the field Rick was all business. He didn't have the power of most pitchers "no" but he had doubled the wits and doubled the accuracy of eighty percent of most pitchers. Even though he didn't have the power of most pitchers he still helped lead the Red-sox to the world-series. But not only helping win his division, he helped lead the Red-sox to a world series due to a brilliant coaching-staff and spectacular pitching.

good word choice

To teach me the basics Rick would lay out a board so when I stride I should land right next to the board, if not I would trip and fall. Doing this I realized that my accuracy had improved a load. I was then able to throw balls with a greater amount of speed and accuracy to go along with it.

So anyone should be able to see why Rick Kruger I look up to and why he's my hero. My friends ask me "why do I love base-ball." And I'll always say: "because base-ball is a sport I love and want to get better at."

ahhhhhhhh...
